

Please do not change the indecency broadcasting policies.

Any further exposure to our children to this vulgar material will significantly damage their future growth. Parents don't always have control over what their children see anyway, and increasing the amount of offensive material is not the right answer. Studies have shown that premature exposure to subject material such as sex and drugs lead to aggressive and other negative behavior traits.

Where the current policies stand is a good balance between what is acceptable and what is vulgar. From an economics point of view, broadcasting companies stand to loose a lot of viewers/listeners if the indecency policies are changed to allow more material. Clearly, that is their choice and their risk.

It is this authors opinion that the broadcasting indecency policies should not be changed.
